CALL FOR PAPERS

New Zealand Studies in Applied Linguistics (NZSAL)

NZSAL is a refereed journal that is published twice a year. It welcomes manuscripts from those actively involved in Applied Linguistics/Applied Language Studies including second and foreign language educators, researchers, teacher educators, language planners, policy makers and other language practitioners. The journal is a forum for reporting and critical discussion of language research and practice across a wide range of languages and international contexts of interest to those in New Zealand. A broad range of research types is represented (qualitative and quantitative, established and innovative), including cross-disciplinary approaches.

1. Full-length articles (3000-5000 words).
2. Short reports and summaries (1500-2000 words).
3. Reviews of professional books, classroom texts, and other instructional materials (1000 words).

Manuscripts are considered on an ongoing basis. Manuscripts following the Guidelines for Contributors should be sent to:
